VOICES.

"To do something to instruct, but more to inspire the young and aspiring student;— to excite him to place more confidence in his own strength, and less in the infallibility of great names;—to help him to emancipate his mind from the shackles of authority;—to teach him to distinguish between what is true and what is false;—to warn him not to pay himself with words;—to show him that a young man's own imagination, will not always inform the judgment;—to show him that it is more honorable to feed himself with error."
